Project Manager

In Newark, low-income residents often cannot afford to live in a healthy and safe community. The social costs of unhealthy living, like limited access to fresh and healthy foods, transportation, affordable and safe housing and medical care, further destabilize families and entrench people in poverty. This large-scale social problem requires broad cross-sector coordination and was the impetus for the creation of Newark’s Strong Healthy Communities Initiative (SHCI). SHCI will integrate several existing revitalization strategies in Newark aiming to end the cycle of poverty and create stronger, healthier, and safer communities starting in several Newark neighborhoods.

Newark’s SHCI represents an unprecedented coordinated endeavor to tackle the cycle of poverty in Newark. To drive this effort, the following organizations agreed to work collectively to create a joint approach to solving these problems and coordinate resources and activities*:

- Nonprofits including the Center for Collaborative Change, Jewish Renaissance Medical Center, Greater Newark Conservancy, Newark Now, Brick City Development Corporation;
- Community Development Financial Institutions including New Jersey Community Capital;
- Public agencies including the City of Newark’s Departments of Economic and Housing Development, Police, and Child and Family Well-Being; Newark Public Schools; the New Jersey Division on Civil Rights, Rutgers University; and the New Jersey Economic Development Authority;
- Local and national philanthropic community including Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, and the Healthcare Foundation of New Jersey.

Key to the strategy is $14.75 million in capital over three years ($2.75 million in grants, $3 million in program-related investments and $9 million in debt) from The Living Cities Integration Initiative that will be partially matched by Prudential Social Investments, The Prudential Foundation and other local funders. The lead partners responsible for programmatic and fiscal oversight for the SHCI include the Center for Collaborative Change, the Prudential Foundation and the City of Newark’s Department of Economic and Housing Development.

Newark was recently awarded funding through the Living Cities Integration Initiative and will be a part of a national learning community with the four other winning cities—Baltimore, Detroit, Cleveland and the Twin Cities. The Integration Initiative is a multi-year effort designed to support bold approaches for breaking through the impasses to transforming metropolitan areas, specially creating opportunities for low-income families and communities to achieve economic security.

The Project Manager will oversee the Strong Healthy Communities Initiative (SHCI) and is primarily responsible for managing and supporting the initiative through ensuring the implementation of its work plan, ongoing facilitation and communication among partners, and handling logistic and administrative details for the initiative to function smoothly.

Key Role and Responsibilities

- Manage and facilitate the coordination of initiative activities including executive and steering committee, work groups, and community engagement activities.
- Coordinate and work in partnership with lead organization responsible for identifying policy and systems barriers and developing solutions for coordinated action, and similarly coordinate with the financial organization to ensure that the deployment of capital progresses as outlined in the work plan and in line with programmatic priorities.
