MITIGATING THE IMPACT
OF CONCENTRATED FORECLOSURES ON NEIGHBORHOODS

RECOGNIZING THE PROBLEM
Foreclosures, like the subprime lending that precipitated them, have been heavily concentrated in the same vulnerable neighborhoods targeted by community development efforts over the last 20 years. The resulting vacant and abandoned properties threaten the property values of neighboring homeowners, invite crime and discourage future investment.

In 2007, Living Cities, a national philanthropic collaboration of 21 of the world’s largest foundations and financial institutions, recognized the urgency of finding promising approaches to address the realities of the foreclosure crisis.

FINDING INNOVATIVE APPROACHES
Recognizing that there was no “one-size-fits-all” solution to reclaiming vacant and foreclosed properties, Living Cities approached key coalitions in over a dozen markets to learn more about their work, their needs and how Living Cities might best be able to support this work. The goal was to support pilot programs in three types of markets—weak, moderate (or mixed) and strong.

Living Cities selected 10 projects from around the country that all had the potential to:
• Quickly begin operations
• Be replicated in other cities
• Work with hundreds of units over two to three years
• Marshal resources including capital, data and talent
• Provide a meaningful role for Living Cities funding

SUPPORTING INNOVATIVE APPROACHES
Since mid-2008, Living Cities has disbursed $7 million in grants and loans to test the most promising local approaches for returning foreclosed properties to productive use. By providing various forms of support to the organizations that are running these programs, we are helping to ensure that locally based innovative solutions have the opportunity to inform emerging and future responses to the subprime mortgage crisis. (Funding for this initiative was provided by Living Cities and the Open Society Institute with additional contributions from the following Living Cities members: Ford Foundation, The Kresge Foundation, Deutsche Bank and The Annie E. Casey Foundation.)

Since the beginning of the effort, both the economic crisis and federal funding have presented both daunting challenges and exciting opportunities for Living Cities’ grantees. See the chart on the back of this page for highlights on each program.

LIVING CITIES MEMBERS
Living Cities’ members are not simply funders. They participate at the senior management level on our board of directors and contribute the time of more than 80 expert staff toward crafting and implementing our agenda. For 18 years, Living Cities’ members have co-invested more than $500 million that has, in turn, leveraged over $16 billion in tangible community assets.

Providing Additional Support

The Living Cities Catalyst Fund is investing $1 million each in Opportunity Housing, LLC, which is affiliated with Neighborhood Progress in Cleveland, and the Neighborhood Stabilization Loan Fund, which is affiliated with the Massachusetts Housing Investment Corporation. The Catalyst Fund is a social investment vehicle that provides patient capital to outstanding not-for-profit organizations that create opportunities and make markets work better for low income residents of America’s cities.

In order to help these 10 grantees succeed in their efforts, Living Cities has also provided the following forms of support.

- Technical Assistance: Living Cities created a technical assistance pool that allows each grantee to apply for up to $10,000 in technical assistance in order to explore new innovations or to scale up existing programs.

- Knowledge Sharing: Living Cities creates opportunities both on- and offline for grantees to network and learn from one another’s experiences, share documents, initiate forum discussions, study one another’s work—including challenges, strategies and lessons learned—and learn from experts in the field.

- Publications: In addition to a detailed case study being published in 2009, Living Cities plans to publish a formal evaluation of grantees’ work/the grant program in 2010.
